Although Adam Spencer said he can arrive at a Theatresports gig completely unprepared and not feel guilty, don't be tricked into thinking it's an easy performance.

The improvised theatre competition, where participants are given a scenario and have to create interesting theatre off the top of their heads, can be anything but simple.

"I once did a rap explaining Einstein's  $E=mc^2$  that both kept its rhythm and was scientifically accurate," Spencer said.

However sometimes things don't go quite that well and Spencer and his teammates can be left in front of an audience without much to say.

"Last Sunday in the semi-final, in a scene about bicycle pumps, I contributed nothing," he said.

"Unfortunately my two teammates had about as much to contribute themselves. It was an absolute dog of a scene."

Spencer said his strength was songs and operas in the improvised challenges and his dream team would include Steve Waugh, Glenn McGrath and Stuart Macgill.
